| INTRODUCTION |

The Madrid Forum on Technologies and Communications is pleased to present the conference, “The Role of Europe in Internet Governance”, led by Jon Crowcroft, Marconi Professor in communications systems at the University of Cambridge.

Professor Jon Crowcroft holds a MSc and a PhD in Computer Sciences from the University College London, where he was a professor until 2001.

He is a fellow of the ACM, the IEEE, the IET, the British Computer Society and the Royal Academy of Engineering. He has published five books and several scientific articles in the field of communications and multimedia systems.

He is currently on sabbatical with the Madrid Institute for Advanced Studies in Networks (IMDEA Networks).

IMDEA Networks forms part of the group of Institutes for Advanced Studies created under a new initiative by the Regional Government of Madrid. It aims to be the new institutional brand which will facilitate and combine public and private participation in sciences and bring research in line with market demands. IMDEA Networks strives for excellence in research in network technologies, services and content.
